DRYSDALE GLEE HOUSE
Newtown vicinity, King and Queen County, Virginia

Date of erection: Early eighteenth century

Builder: Episcopal Church

Present condition: Good

Description:

This is an unusually good example of a glebe house, or rectory, of the eighteenth century. It is of brick, laid in Flemish bond, with all the headers of grey-white glazed brick. The rest of the walling is a soft salmon color. The roof is a steep gable with tall inside end chimneys. The fenestration has been somewhat altered. There are three openings below, with two dormers on the roof.

The interior contains a good early staircase with closed string and turned balusters. The lower flight has been painted white, but the gallery section has its original blue and brown. Other than the original six-panel doors, little original woodwork remains.
